Lycoming Goes National

Lycoming Picked As One Of Nation's Best

Lycoming College's 1990-91 academic year has been highlighted by three opportunities to bask in the national limelight.

U.S. News & World Report selected Lycoming as one of the top 10 regional liberal arts colleges in the North following an analysis of institutional strengths and educational programs. U.S. News initiated the annual study by placing the nation's 1,374 four-year colleges and universities into the four broad groups established by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. U.S. News subdivided each group into regions. Lycoming was included among the 385 schools identified as regional liberal arts colleges.

All 1,374 four-year schools were ranked based upon the results of the U.S. News survey of presidents, deans and admissions directors, and the review of statistical data on the "selectivity of the student body; the degree to which the school financially supports a high-quality, full-time faculty; its overall financial resources and the level of student satisfaction as measured by the school's ability to graduate the students it admits as freshmen."

The acceptance rate (% of students applying who are accepted); the yield (% of accepted students who actually enroll); high school rank-in-class, and the average combined results of standardized entrance examinations (SAT or ACT) were used to evaluate the freshman class of 1989 and determine individual rankings in the student selectivity category.

Faculty quality was determined based upon an analysis of four measures: "The ratio of full-time students to full-time faculty; the percentage of full-time faculty with doctorates; the percentage of faculty with part-time status, and the average salary," (with benefits) for all tenured full professors. Fall 1989 data was used for this assessment as well.

Fiscal strength was measured by dividing the 1989 educational and general budget expenditures by the total enrollment. And, lastly, the average percentage of the 1982 to 1984 freshman classes who graduated within ten semesters was used to arrive at the student satisfaction ranking.

Lycoming ranked highest in faculty quality and financial resources and management. Lycoming is enjoying the benefits of a strong faculty who have an opportunity to focus their energies on individual students as a result of an excellent student-to-faculty ratio. This conclusion of the U.S. News analysis came as no surprise to the campus community where a talented faculty with a commitment to quality classroom instruction has been a hallmark of Lycoming College for generations.

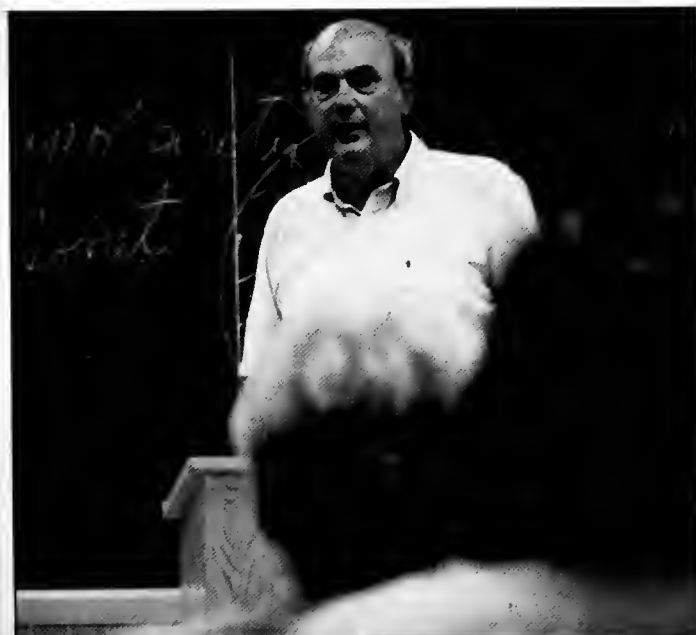

Lycoming Recognized For Commitment To Liberal Arts

A second national exposure occurred through The College Board Review magazine. In the summer 1990 issue, Dr. David W. Breneman, former president of Kalamazoo College (Michigan) published the results of a study he had conducted while serving as a visiting fellow in economic studies for the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C. Dr. Breneman, conducting research for a book on the future of private, liberal arts colleges, discovered that of the approximately 600 four-year institutions in the country that claim to be liberal arts colleges, only about 200 of them actually met his "reasonable definition" of what a liberal arts institution should be. Breneman excluded institutions that did not award at least 40 percent of their degrees in liberal arts. The remainder were becoming what he defined as "professional colleges," institutions offering a majority of their academic programs in areas of professional training. Included among those institutions identified as providing a true liberal arts educational experience was Lycoming College.

Breneman noted that, "Only the liberal arts colleges are distinguished by a mission of providing four-year baccalaureate education exclusively, in a setting that emphasizes and rewards good teaching above all else." He expressed concern about the future of higher education as the number of quality teaching institutions declines, stating, "One of its oft-noted and much-valued attributes, will be much reduced if these small, private colleges are unable to sustain themselves and their mission because of changing economic circumstances."

Dr. Breneman mentioned that the four-year liberal arts colleges as a group historically enroll a smaller number of students but provide a disproportionate number of graduates who earn doctorates as well as pursue careers in academia.

Breneman concluded that many institutions that claim to have a liberal arts emphasis have moved toward professional programs in response to economic and marketplace pressures. "The liberal arts college is in much greater peril than I thought it was, but not because it is failing financially and closing its doors. Instead it is surviving, but only by changing and becoming something else."

"The liberal arts college is in much greater peril than I thought it was, but not because it is failing financially and closing its doors. Instead it is surviving, but only by changing and becoming something else."

Lycoming can be proud of its commitment to a broad-based academic experience in the liberal arts and sciences. Lycoming's mission statement proclaims publicly a commitment to quality undergraduate instruction. Recent surveys by alumni have confirmed that the most significant aspect of their undergraduate experience was the quality of the instruction provided by Lycoming faculty. This characteristic continues today and helps the College gain a measure of distinction among comparable institutions across the country.

Lycoming College remains committed to helping students learn how to learn while preparing individuals for meaningful contributions to society. To provide a Lycoming education is expensive. Full-time faculty are more expensive than graduate student teachers; small classes are more costly than large lectures. Alumni and friends of the College who support its mission can keep Lycoming strong by doing their part to provide the financial resources necessary to maintain its programs. With fiscal strength, the College can sustain and strengthen its reputation and earn even greater recognition for quality instruction.

The Mission Of Lycoming College

The mission of Lycoming College is to provide a distinguished baccalaureate education in the liberal arts. This is achieved within a coeducational, supportive, residential setting through programs that develop communication and critical thinking skills; foster self-awareness while increasing receptivity to new concepts and perspectives; explore literary and scientific traditions; cultivate an aesthetic sensibility; elicit social responsibility; promote racial inclusiveness, gender equality, and an appreciation of cultural diversity; and produce leadership for the institutions of society. Each student is encouraged to develop and strengthen those virtues and traits of character that enable, ennoble, and emancipate the human spirit while deepening commitment to those values that undergird civilization.

Warriors Earn Championship Bowl Bid

Lycoming College stepped into the national spotlight on the gridiron of Hawkins Stadium at the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl in Bradenton, Florida, where the Warriors played Allegheny College (Meadeville, PA) for the NCAA Division III national championship.

Televised across the nation on ESPN, Lycoming led until the fourth quarter but lost in a first-ever tie breaker by a score of 21-14.

"Wasn't it a great run!" said Coach Frank Girardi, the chief architect of the Warriors program that can now boast six Conference championships, three-time participation in the NCAA post season tournament, the ninth best winning percentage in the nation for the 1980's and a second place national finish in the first year of the 1990's.

Coach Girardi reminds his Warriors during a Stagg Bowl practice session that they have achieved a level of athletic excellence that only two schools out of 221 nationally can claim.

"Disappointed? Sure," said Girardi, "When you get that close to the big prize and not get it. Hey! We would not be human if we said we were not disappointed."

Sitting in his office, surrounded by numerous reminders of the Warriors' accomplishments under his leadership, the Williamsport native smiled as he added, "There are many, I'm sure, who have focused in on that one game. I have letters from people who wanted me to know they were sorry because we did not win. People come up to me on the street and express their sadness that we did not win in Florida. What they don't understand," he added, "is what this entire experience meant to every kid in our program, each coach, each member of the Warrior family. We were not losers. In one game, yes, but this reached far beyond a game of football. This team played the schedule that took us to the final game, but every Lycoming player, now or in the past, walked with us in pride to the national championship game."

There was another kind of message received that was more important to Girardi and his Warriors - those many notes that poured in from across America giving credence to his claim of Lycoming pride being felt in just about every corner of the nation.

"I'm not just talking football here. They were Lycoming people, people who had taken time to write, to call or to come out to see us play in one of the games. You see, that's the story I want to tell about this experience. We have proof that we touched a lot of people out there. Those who showed up came wearing some kind of Lycoming clothing, and I can tell you, a lot of those shirts and jackets were from way back! It was really exciting to meet these people and to know that these kids had made them proud of Lycoming College!"

The national recognition actually began last season when Lycoming gained a bid to the post-season tournament and played two games (defeating Dickinson and losing to Ferrum). It was during the Ferrum game that Brent Musberger, then with CBS Sports, was handed scores from football games being played at all levels. On reading the Ferrum at Lycoming score he asked, on the air, "Who are these people?"

Who would have believed that just one football season later, Lycoming would be playing on live TV and for a national championship.

"If anyone would have told me in August that we would be playing December 8th in Florida for the national championship, I would have had them examined," said Girardi, laughing. "We knew we had some very good talent but also recognized that many things had to fall the right way for us."

Lycoming fans proclaim proudly that the Warriors will always be number one in their hearts.

Some of those "things" were finding four defensive front starters to go with lone returnee Dean Hoffman, locating someone to replace All-American tight end Vic Olear and offensive replacements for people like guard Eric Faust, tackle Steve Lenz and fullback Garth Lakitsky.

"It was not until after the Widener game that I knew we had something special. We lost Troy (All-American running back Troy Erdman) early in the game and were trailing at the half. We were not playing good football, and I told the kids during the break that they were in a position of making a major decision regarding the rest of the season. I reminded them that championship teams fight through the negatives and come back winners. It took a misplay on their (Widener's) part to give us the winning edge but our play over the second half proved to me we were capable of achieving something extra this year."

Girardi's message to his players the next week became the team theme for the rest of the season.

"We told them - Don't stop reaching. There is no goal too much for you to achieve. I also began to realize that nothing these kids did, from that game on, would surprise me."

A Girardi coached Warrior team opens pre-season camp with one stated goal—win the Middle Atlantic Conference. The 19-year veteran of "preaching that gospel" feels that Lycoming should play toward high expectations and that going for the MAC title is a very realistic approach to every new season.

"Up to that hectic ending at Widener, I was not really sure of our direction (for 1990) but that game became the key to the rest of the year. Just look at what these kids did from that day on."

What "they did" was very impressive. Lycoming defeated five more conference opponents including previously undefeated Juniata and arch rival Susquehanna. The Warriors completed the second ever undefeated, untied season in Lycoming football history and went on to defeat three "paper favorites," Carnegie Mellon, Washington and Jefferson and Hofstra, in the NCAA tournament leading to the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl.

"We told them - Don't stop reaching. There is no goal too much for you to achieve."

"Chemistry!" said Girardi. "Don't forget to mention chemistry 'cause we had it. For example, let's talk about the offensive line. These guys don't get the attention other position players get. We give all of our people progress cards to fill out at the beginning of the week. These linemen would write that their goal was to keep their opponent from getting to Doc (QB Ed Dougherty) or a goal of making sure the running backs could find daylight when they had to carry the ball. It was the same with everyone on the team - rooting for each other, helping out where it was needed. These kids were highly motivated - something you really can't coach. When we said it was a team effort, we truly meant it."

Girardi could have added that team chemistry has been a trademark of the Warrior program over the past several seasons. It, too, can be counted as a reason why so many former Warriors gathered in such places as Washington, PA, Hempstead, NY or Bradenton, FL with their Lycoming logos showing.

Said Girardi, "I could sit here and talk about this Lycoming experience until we open camp next fall. In fact, the more I talk about it the more I wish camp was opening today. It really is a feeling that you don't want to put up on the shelf because of the impact it had on so many people - people in and around our (football) program, people from our Lycoming community and people from several area communities surrounding Lycoming."

With that he stood up, opened the door and waiting outside were two bright-eyed high school senior recruits invited to the campus.

"Hi, Coach."

It was time to put 1990 feelings away for 1991 was underway.

Janice Ramin Yaw: A Different Approach to Family Law

By: Karen Meier '91

Janice Ramin Yaw '70

Every day, when Janice Ramin Yaw collects her papers and files for work, she brings along with her plenty of compassion and understanding. She believes that these items are as essential as the laws she works with.

Yaw, a 1970 magna cum laude graduate of Lycoming College, is one of Williamsport's most respected family lawyers. She is currently employed by the law offices of Casale & Bonner. Her compassionate view of family law has aided her in her success. "I see such an insensitivity towards people who are going through divorces. I know that you cannot handle family law people the same way you handle people who are coming in for a contract. You need to have feeling for these people—they are going through a loss."

And Ms. Yaw should know. Her experience with law began on the other side, as a client. "I came through the court system as a client, so I've seen the other side. I don't think a lot of attorneys had their first experience as clients. I know what it is like."

It is this experience, in fact, that changed the course of her law profession. She entered law school with the intention of going into international or immigration law, since such areas would allow her to utilize the foreign language background she received at Lycoming. However, not long after she entered law school, she changed her mind and decided to become a family law attorney. "When I was in my first year of law school, I was going through a divorce. I felt the lack of sensitivity in family law."

Thus, the course of Ms. Yaw's life changed. After fourteen years in the Williamsport School District, at the age of thirty-eight, she left the teaching profession and went to law school. During this time, many of her teaching materials were published, including a Spanish and a French instruction and resource book for teachers. She is still affiliated with the Gessler Publishing Company, having completed filmstrips and software programs, as well as continuing to do seminars for the company. Ms. Yaw continues to have a fondness for teaching. "I love teaching—it's wonderful when a student comes back and says, 'I did this because of you.' I really do miss it."

When Ms. Yaw entered law school, she paid for her schooling partly with the royalties from her published works. She admits that things got tough at times, but she was determined to make it. She continued to work for the Gessler Publishing Company two or three days a week while attending Villanova Law School. "There was a time in law school when I got into a financial bind, and I had to rent out the living room of my apartment to a female student. Also, a woman I tutored would tape classes for me because I would be away for a week to do a show for my publishing company. It was tough."

Ms. Yaw feels she has the right through experience to stand before her clients and tell them that they can get back on their feet. She is living proof of what determination, hard work, and a belief in one's self can do. "You have to talk to people about more than just the law, you have to encourage them to get out there and rebuild their lives—you have to give them some hope."

Although Ms. Yaw sees insensitivity in many areas of family law, she is especially concerned about matters affecting children. In Lycoming County, for example, a parent must wait for an entire year for a custody case to come to trial and a child support case may take up to three months. "Too often the children in divorces are just brushed aside. Simply because the parents could not make the marriage work is no reason why the children should have to suffer."

"Too often the children in divorces are just brushed aside. Simply because the parents could not make the marriage work is no reason why the children should have to suffer."

Though she has dealt with other types of cases, she deals almost entirely with family law. She admits it can be difficult: "I think, in family law, you really have to want to do it. The monetary rewards which exist for corporate or other branches of the law are just not there in family law. Also, it can be emotionally trying. You are dealing with people who are very upset, and often the only people they can take it out on is their lawyer. But, it feels so good when you know you've done something for these people and they are going to get their lives back on track. You give them hope."

Now that Ms. Yaw has achieved her goal of becoming a lawyer, she has set her sights on something even higher; she would like to be the fourth judge at the Lycoming County courthouse and, in fact, recently declared her candidacy. This position could result in the assignment of one judge who would handle mainly family law cases.

Janice Ramin Yaw certainly has achieved a great deal since her days at Lycoming College. Though her major courses of study were Spanish and education, she feels that the liberal arts education she received at Lycoming was an excellent background for a career in law. "Lycoming is a student-centered campus. With the administration and the faculty, the students come first. I remember being able to talk to my professors about everything, not just school matters. They made themselves available and the Precisely two weeks ago at this time, the Cathedral Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, that is, the National Cathedral, was being dedicated. It had been begun in 1907, and, 83 years later, the final capstone was mortared into place. The Washington Post that day had a story about two women who had not only been present when Theodore Roosevelt spoke at that laying of the cornerstone, but actually remembered the occasion. It is unlikely that many of us will be around to recall this day, say, seventy-two years from now when Lycoming College celebrates its 250th anniversary, but there may be two or three (perhaps Mark and Anna Douthat) who will either recall the dedication of the Heim Building, or who will have heard from their elders about it. I hope that there are, because the completion of a building dedicated to the pursuit of knowledge is worth remembering.

My special interest in "building dedications as a variety of religious experience" stems, no doubt, from the fact that my wife is a seminarian, on her way toward ordination in the Episcopal Church. (She suffers greatly from being in league with a Darwinian husband, particularly when I attempt to determine the scientific literacy of an audience by asking it if it is aware of the geneticist and his wife who had identical twins, baptized one, and kept the other for a control.) Buildings, you see, if used properly, form a generational link that gives a physical reality to what will come again. The Celebrants who will be here in 2062 (the year after Halley's Comet returns, by the way) will recall the students who practiced science within these walls.

This "practice of science" brings me to my subject, which I have chosen to describe as "the two cultures of science." I do not refer to C.P. Snow's "Two Cultures," that is, the dichotomy between the humanities and the sciences, although that is still a real issue. Rather, I refer to the current state of things wherein the practice of science is a distinct and incomprehensible culture alien to the learning of science.

Dr. Robert A. Zaccaria is conducting a class in the new anatomy and physiology lab on the first floor of the Heim building. Photo by Dr. Jack Diehl

After a quarter of a century of involvement with undergraduate students, I have spent the past several years dealing with issues in pre-college science education. As many of you know, the nation has been very concerned with the performance of American students in international comparisons of scientific knowledge and proficiency, and reform movements are springing up like mushrooms after a rain. First with the National Science Foundation, which, as an example, has invested a quarter of a billion dollars in teacher programs since 1983, and now with the National Science Teachers Association, representing some 50,000 members, I have become immersed in programs that address the improvement of science teaching. I will outrageously simplify the problem with the following items:

- a) interest in science courses at all levels is declining;
- b) interest in science teaching is declining;
- c) only one quarter of those newly qualified to teach a particular science will end up teaching that science;
- d) half of the new science teachers produced in any one year will leave the teaching profession by the end of their fifth year.

There are a number of reasons for this, but I would like to place the bulk of the blame (if blame can have bulk) on the universities. (Having outrageously simplified, I will now outrageously generalize.)

Dr. Russell Aiuto emphasized the importance of "doing science" during his dedicatory address. Photo by David Burke

Scientists at universities, particularly the research universities, care little about undergraduates—even less about undergraduates interested in pre-college teaching. Freshman courses, either for major or non-major, are abysmally taught, either by ill-equipped graduate students or foreign students, or by bored professional deadwood, or by “great performers” who fulfill H.L. Mencken’s definition of a pedagogue, “one who casts false pearls before reluctant swine.” In effect, scientists do science, while others less capable teach science. And those that do science—usually collaboratively, interdisciplinarily, as an intellectual process—insist that younger students receive rigid disciplinary instruction, encyclopedic in scope, with memorization as the most prominent neurological activity. Further, when they deign to teach science to undergraduates (and please note that even their “lesser” colleagues do this), they consider their particular course (or discipline) as a “filter,” not a “pump.” For them, science is a special achievement open to the gifted, and not an endeavor that could be mastered by the average human.

So, we have ill-served undergraduates—ill-served by the so-called comprehensive universities as well—who have as their teaching models the most inept of teachers, mostly lecturers who believe that “teaching is telling,” who in turn inflict this approach on their young students. Those public school teachers who wise up, as I have mentioned, often leave teaching after five years, or burn out because of administrative obstacles and pettiness, or stay in the teaching profession with solidified bad habits.

This brings me to the place where the two cultures—as they should be—are one: the liberal arts college. The obvious and well-documented features that support this need not be belabored. Reasonably sized classes, genuine concern with teaching, production of Ph.D.’s, curricular innovation—all of these accomplishments of liberal arts colleges are well known. The most important element, for me, is that students and teachers together do science, treat it not as a subject, but as a human endeavor, engage each other in laboratory and field, often publishing together. One needs only to read Dr. Zimmerman’s article in the March, 1990, Lycoming Quarterly to see how this is done so admirably.

But most of all, at the most effective liberal arts colleges even C.P. Snow’s complaints disappear, as science students perform in musical ensembles and plays, paint, draw, sculpt, look at ideas in history and philosophy that expand their understanding of nature. After all, is there an essential difference between a blank page, an empty canvas, or an empty flash? All are silent questions waiting for the creativity that will supply a variety of answers. I don’t care what the rhetoric one hears floating from over the Charles River, one does not find that kind of engagement at M.I.T., nor at many other of the overly populated giants of academe.

New chemistry labs are equipped with individual work stations and exhaust hoods so students can conduct experiments in a safe, spacious environment.

There is a danger, however. The phenomenon of the two cultures, as well as a value system that rewards scientific research (good or trivial) over teaching, is invading liberal arts colleges, as some, hungry for grant money and prestige, position themselves into a new and nonsensical category called “the research college.” How unfortunate, for I think of a research college as one at which students and faculty “research,” teach, and learn together. The infected liberal arts colleges, I think, mean colleges that attempt to hold their faculty to university standards so that they may become small Yales.

Well, what all this means is that today we dedicate a building within which science will be well practiced, so that students will leave here with the ability to practice science as a profession, or to practice science outside of a scientific profession as an informed and enlightened human being. My hope is that students—all students—will understand that one cannot comprehend a topic such as pollution without recognizing that it has been a persistent human issue—Henryk Ibsen wrestled with it over a hundred years ago in his play, “An Enemy of the People”—that an understanding of its scope requires knowledge of economics and history as well as chemistry, physics, and biology. This place, and wonderful buildings like it across the country (but not quite as splendid as this!) are where this revolution in science education will begin.

Out of this revolution the paradox of progress that science brings us will be more than an insoluble conundrum. We will be able to understand. Lawrence and Lee, in their play “Inherit The Wind” present the challenge well, when Henry Drummond (the Clarence Darrow character) tells the jury that “Everything has its price. Man can fly, but the clouds will smell of gasoline, and the birds will lose their wonder.”

Thank you for allowing me to be part of this important day, where the two cultures of science are one.

Alumni Association Presents Annual Awards

The 1990 Outstanding Alumnus Award was presented to MORGAN VINCENT KNAPP at the Homecoming Dinner, Saturday, October 13th.

After enrolling in Dickinson Seminary, Morgan continued his active participation in music, which he had begun in second grade. He was a part of the vocal ensemble, the tour choir and the quartet. Music has been his life-long avocation. Now living in San Diego, California, he is still singing with the Symphonic Chorale, the Master Chorale and the Grossmont College Chorale, as well as his church choir.

Morgan enjoyed a 33-year government career with the Department of Defense, spending his last 19 years administering the awarding of government contracts. Since retirement he has worked as a volunteer in preparing a weekly radio show for broadcast to the blind.

Reflecting on the joy that music has brought to his life and realizing that it all started here in this campus community, he decided to establish the "Morgan V. Knapp Endowed Music and Scholarship Fund" at Lycoming College. The description of the fund reads in part ". . . Because he wants young people who evidence musical talent to be able to develop their abilities, he has established his fund to . . ."

1. Provide scholarship help to financially needy students who are majoring in music.
2. Provide applied music scholarships for private lessons as awarded by the music faculty.
3. Provide funds to help underwrite the College Tour Choir.
4. Provide funds to help underwrite the College Band Tour.

His enthusiasm for the fund has made it grow far beyond what he originally envisioned and has brought him much joy and satisfaction.

Morgan V. Knapp '35, left, with son, Mike, enjoys his Lycoming College chair, presented during the Homecoming Banquet in recognition of his selection as the Outstanding Alumnus for 1990.

Paula and Eli Stavisky '61, enjoy reading Eli's citation recognizing his numerous professional and civic accomplishments.

ELI STAVISKY received the 1990 Outstanding Achievement Award.

A distinguished dentistry career, spanning a quarter of a century, had its foundation laid at Lycoming College from which Eli graduated in 1961. His bachelors degree in biology gained him acceptance into the Temple University School of Dentistry, where he completed the first part of his professional preparation in 1965. A pause in his education allowed him to serve his country as a captain in the United States Air Force. An internship and residency in oral surgery were completed at Brooklyn-Cumberland Medical Center. Postgraduate work in oral surgery at New York University College of Dentistry came next.

His professional honors include Diplomate, American Board of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgeons; Fellow, International College of Dentistry; Fellow, American College of Dentistry; and Member, Pierre Fauchard Academy.

He is currently a member of the Pennsylvania State Board of Dentistry, serving as chairman since 1984. He is the dental appointee of the Pennsylvania Secretary of Health to the State Health Department's Anesthesia Committee and an active examiner and member of the Steering Committee of the Northeast Regional Board which prepares and administers dental licensure examinations in fourteen states and the District of Columbia. Because of his successful career in dentistry he has been a speaker/lecturer at many functions throughout the country.

In addition to his roles in dental affairs, Eli is an active staff member at the hospitals with which he is affiliated. Appointments and elections have included membership in and chairmanship of the Executive, Credentials, Bylaws, Grievance and Penal, and Hearing Committees.

Along with his wife and three daughters he makes his home in Old Forge, Pennsylvania, where he is associated in the practice of oral and maxillofacial surgery and active in church and community affairs.

This year the Dale V. Bower Service Award was presented to J. MICHAEL SCHWEDER.

As a student at Lycoming College, Mike found time to play varsity football and to serve as president of his class and Sigma Pi Fraternity. When he graduated in 1971 he carried with him that enthusiasm and leadership skill.

Initially he taught government and coached high school students in his native Bethlehem, Pennsylvania area. He was then elected to the 135th District seat in the Pennsylvania Legislature and served the people of his area for three terms. His leadership was recognized when he was honored as the Bethlehem Jaycees "Outstanding Young Man of the Year" for 1978.

His career in government relations evolved further, and he is now serving as a legislative liaison for AT&T.

Annette (Weaver) '72 and Michael Schweder '71, were congratulated by President Douthat following the alumni banquet.

Mike's concern for higher education and its importance to the young people of our society has been a driving force in his service to his Alma Mater. For the Admissions Office he has visited high schools and has arranged visits to the campus. Just last winter, he and his wife hosted an Alumni/Admissions Reception in their Bethlehem home. He has been active with College Advancement, serving on the Lycoming College Fund National Committee and as a Regional Screener/Solicitor for The Campaign for Lycoming College.

Throughout the years he has participated in alumni events by serving as Class Reunion Chairperson in 1976, 1981 and 1986, and has hosted, with his wife, Annette, many successful Moravian-Lycoming football game tent-gate parties.

As one of the unsung heroes of Lycoming College, Mike is a behind-the-scenes worker with great loyalty.

Paul W. Leinbach '48 accompanied his mother, Annabelle Rich Leinbach '09, to the dedication of the Heim Biology and Chemistry Building. Mrs. Leinbach received a special citation from the Alumni Association during the ceremony.

This year at Homecoming, special recognition was given by the Alumni Association to ANNABELLE RICH LEINBACH, who is a member of the Dickinson Seminary Class of 1909 and who celebrated her 100th birthday in May of 1990.

Mrs. Leinbach's family has played a major part in the growth of this institution. Her father, M. B. Rich, chaired the Board of Trustees from 1921 to 1931, and her brother, the Honorable Robert F. Rich, followed him as chairman from 1931 to 1964.

Throughout her life she has supported her alma mater in a significant way. In The Campaign for Lycoming College she made a major gift in honor of her two sons, Robert R. '41 and Paul W. '48, both alumni of Williamsport Dickinson Junior College. The second floor lobby of the Heim Biology and Chemistry Building carries the designation of Mrs. Leinbach's generosity.

Help Honor Lycoming Alumni

Each year at Homecoming the following awards are presented to honor our alumni.

President James E. Douthat announced recently that Mr. and Mrs. John E. Person, Jr., longtime friends of the College and Williamsport residents, have completed a $500,000 gift which will be used to establish an endowment fund to support Lycoming's athletic programs.

A member of Lycoming's Board of Trustees from 1970 to 1989, Mr. Person has a long and distinguished career of service to the College and the Williamsport community. His leadership role spans several decades and includes assignments on the Williamsport Hospital board of directors as well as service as a trustee for the Lycoming Foundation, YWCA and the Williamsport-Lycoming Foundation. Mr. Person held numerous positions with the Sun-Gazette Company from 1946 to 1989 and retired as president of the newspaper. Mr. Person's father was a member of the Lycoming's Board of Trustees from 1928 to 1949.

Mrs. Person (Charlotte "Honey" Tepel '37) has shared her husband's longstanding association with Lycoming College through family affiliations and active participation in a variety of College programs. Her sister, Elizabeth Tepel Chrisman, is an alumna from the class of 1940.

Mr. and Mrs. Person, active members of the Pine Street United Methodist Church, have four sons: John III, Michael, Thomas and David.

During his tenure as a Lycoming Trustee, Mr. Person encouraged the College to maintain a policy of sound financial management, recognizing that fiscal strength was vital to insure the integrity of all College programs and services.

With this gift, Lycoming will be able to provide an annual source of revenue to enhance the intercollegiate athletic programs offered by the College.

Why Is There An Annual Fund? What Does It Do For Lycoming?

Private colleges have limited resources with which to operate programs. Student tuition and fees provide the lion's share of funds required to sustain the quality of programs designed to prepare men and women for rewarding and productive lives. These funds amount to approximately 80 percent of the income for the educational and general operating budget at Lycoming.

The college endowment, through careful management of resources entrusted to Lycoming over the years, helps to underwrite yet a smaller portion of the spiraling cost of education.

But it is gifts and contributions to the Annual Fund that insure flexibility in meeting the needs of our students, to change as the future demands. This resource is limited only by the generosity of alumni, parents and friends of Lycoming College. Every dollar makes something happen—a student receives a scholarship, a faculty member is provided a special study opportunity, an artist performs at the campus, new volumes and periodicals are added to the library collection. The list goes on and on. Your gifts provide the very threads that together are woven to make the tapestry known as Lycoming College.

Some gifts, thankfully, are larger than others, providing special opportunities for this campus and the students it serves. No gift is ever too large or too small; every gift is important and strengthens the Lycoming academic experience.

Please join with others in making your gift to the 1990-91 Lycoming College Annual Fund by mailing your check c/o Development Office, Lycoming College, Williamsport, PA 17701-5192.

Gift Annuities Save Taxes And Guarantee Income

Charitable gift annuities offer an attractive method to combine a guaranteed life income, tax savings and a future gift to support the work of Lycoming College.

The gift annuity is simply a contractual agreement with Lycoming College in which a donor (and even another beneficiary) receives a guaranteed income for life. The annual income depends upon the beneficiary's age at the time of the gift, and it remains constant for the duration of the agreement.

The donor receives an immediate income tax deduction and, in addition, a large portion of each annuity income payment is TAX-FREE. Payments can be structured on a monthly, quarterly, semiannual or annual basis.

When the annuity matures, the assets will be used to support some program at the College which is of special interest to the donors.

For a personal example of a charitable gift annuity or additional information on any other form of tax-wise gift that provides income for life, please call the Development Office at 1-800-345-3920 or 1-717-321-4036.

The competition was open to area high school students and Lycoming faculty served as the judges. First place went to Erin Nelson, a senior at Kennedy Christian High School in Sharpsville, PA. She received a $250 cash award and will receive a $2,000 annual scholarship should she attend Lycoming.

Promotions And New Personnel

Larry Wilcox, assistant director of Safety and Security, has been promoted to director. Because of his extensive training in his field, he is an excellent asset to the campus' welfare. He is Lycoming's 1990 recipient of the Makisu award for outstanding service and dedication beyond obligation to the College.

He gained recognition early as an exceptional officer while working with police dogs and has lectured on this type of enforcement at Cornell University.

James Lakis, admissions counselor, has been promoted to financial aid director. Originally from Boston, he graduated from Temple University and will be working primarily with students and their families to help arrange finances for their educational expenses.

David Durdak, from Willoughby, Ohio, is the new coordinator of Residence Life. He came to Lycoming from the Residence Life office at Kent State University, where he also achieved his master's degree in higher education and student personnel. He is a firm believer in using proactive measures to establish a closer link between administration, the students, and the community.

Jerry Falco, a successful assistant director of student activities at St. Francis College, is now Lycoming's new director of student activities. Falco's education consists of a Bowling Green University master's degree in college student personnel while also working as the school's coordinator of student activities. Falco's enthusiasm for his job is spreading throughout the campus.

administration really seemed to encourage them to be involved with the students."

She has two pieces of advice for today's students. "First, you have to develop your own potential. You cannot live your life through someone else. And second, when you are in college, I think you should take advantage of the opportunities you have. If you are fortunate enough to be in college and not have to support yourself, take all of the opportunities the college gives you. Go to the Artist Series and everything else Lycoming College provides."

Lycoming College is proud of the achievements of Janice Ramin Yaw. She is an outstanding alumna who effectively demonstrates what the small-college atmosphere of Lycoming College can do. The one-on-one caring contact that a student gets at Lycoming can carry on into the working world and truly make a difference.

Karen Meier was a student intern in public relations during the fall semester, 1990-91.

Another Lycoming graduate, Clinton W. Smith (summa cum laude, 1955), has presided as Judge of the Common Pleas Court of Lycoming County since 1981. Active as a member of the Board of Directors of the Lycoming Chamber of Commerce and as a Trustee of the College, as well as with a number of other civic and charitable organizations, Smith has long been involved in the intersecting lives of the Williamsport and Lycoming College communities. When asked for advice for those students who might be interested in law-related careers, Smith recommended that they attend a liberal arts school such as Lycoming and concentrate their studies in English and psychology; after all, he said, lawyers must learn "to analyze, think, and express themselves orally and in writing."

Alumni Throw Hats In Election Ring

William S. Kieser '65, Trout Run, has recently announced his intention to run for the newly created fourth judgeship in Lycoming County.

Thomas C. Marino '85, Williamsport, has officially launched his bid to become the community's next district attorney.

Thomas A. Paternostro '64, Picture Rocks, has declared his candidacy for County Commissioner in Lycoming County.

George Gedon '78, Williamsport, has recently announced his candidacy for a fourth term in office as Lycoming County coroner.

The Public Forum

Campus and city-wide residents have been regularly participating in the Public Forums of Lycoming College. Topics discussed have included the Middle East conflicts, Post Cold-War Europe, and abortion. Among the speakers were Lt. Col. Thomas Maclver, Roderick Mackler of the U.S. State Department, and Sally Butterfield, the local chapter president of the National Organization for Women (N.O.W.).

The Public Forums began when nontraditional student Brenda Gearhart felt the need for another academic activity to be offered on campus. A former army sergeant, she used many of her leadership skills to initiate and organize the Forums. As a history major, she is interested in what is happening in the world. She wants the public to understand the facts and to be aware of the larger issues that encircle their own surroundings.

Lycoming College Alumni: Whereabouts Unknown

Finding a former classmate can be just like looking for the proverbial "needle in a haystack." But not anymore! Soon, an impressive directory of our great alumni will be available to help you locate your old friends.

The new Lycoming College Alumni Directory, scheduled for release in September/October 1992, will be the most up-to-date and complete reference on over 11,000 Lycoming College alumni ever compiled. This comprehensive volume will include current name, address and phone number, academic data, plus business information (if applicable), bound into a classic, library-quality edition.

The Alumni Association has contracted the prestigious Bernard C. Harris Publishing Company, Inc. to produce our Directory. Harris will soon begin researching and compiling information to be printed in the Directory by mailing a questionnaire to each alumnus. (If you prefer not to be listed in the Directory, please contact the Alumni Office in writing as soon as possible.)

The new Lycoming College Alumni Directory will soon make finding a Lycoming College alumnus as easy as opening a book. Look for more details on the project in future issues.

Coach Budd Whitehill Enters NCAA Division III Wrestling Hall of Fame

Coach Budd Whitehill, the only wrestling mentor Lycoming has ever had, has been inducted into the NCAA Division III Wrestling Hall of Fame.

The induction of Whitehill came on February 28th during the NCAA Small College National Tournament in Rock Island, Ill.

"This is a major thrill to me and my family," said Whitehill when the word was announced by Dr. Willie Meyers, President of the Division III Wrestling Coach's Association. That announcement came to the Lycoming campus one day after Whitehill had celebrated a birthday.

"Which one?," when asked about the birthday. "Not really that important. What is important is to have all of those wrestlers know how much this Hall of Fame thing belongs to them. While I am the one holding the award, I have to believe that a lot of guys all over this country are feeling the same pride I have by this honor."

The NCAA Division III wrestling statistics, noting that the sport is carried in 119 small colleges and universities, ranks the Lycoming coach third among the top active and retired mat coaches after the 1989-90 season.

Whitehill, who started the Warrior program during the 1956-57 college academic year, had 345 wins - 148 losses and 5 draws heading into this, his 35th season. In that time he has coached six national champions including Troy Gardner, his 1990 champion at 167. Gardner and fellow senior Bryan Neidigh (5th place finish) became the 34th and 35th wrestling All-Americans the Jersey resident has coached.

His 1989-90 edition finished ninth in the nation, leaving Whitehill two finishes in the NCAA's Top 10 and five times in the Top 20.

The 1990-91 Whitehill edition, showing three seniors on the roster, carved out an 8-1-0 record (as of 2/7/91) to get Whitehill over the half way mark to his 400th career win.

Gaining Hall of Fame credits has been a way of life for the Former Lock Haven State College matman. His name is enshrined in the District Four, PIAA Hall of Fame, the statewide PIAA (Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association) Hall of Fame and the West Branch Chapter, Pennsylvania Sports Hall of Fame.

Whitehill was inducted by the NCAA along with three other coaches and four wrestlers during the pre-tournament banquet to the 1991 NCAA National Small College Wrestling Tournament.

Four Warrior Football Players Named 1991 All-Americans

Two seniors and two juniors from the Warrior football program are among those named to various All-America teams this year.

Senior defensive back, Rick Bealer, was named to the Association Press Small College and Kodak All-America as a first team selection. He was also named to a second team spot on the newly created Champion (Sportswear) U.S.A. All-American.

It was the second consecutive year for Bealer as a first team AP and Kodak. He also holds a first team spot as a Pizza Hut All-American (1989). Bealer was named as a pre-season All-American (Football issue of Sporting News) in both his junior and senior seasons.

Junior quarterback Ed Dougherty, senior running back Troy Erdman (injured in the fourth game) and junior linebacker Bill Small joined Bealer as pre-season selections. Dougherty, Small and senior offensive center Joe Gillespie were named to the Champion, U.S.A. All-America teams.

Mr. Ted Reich, left, President of Jersey Shore State Bank and Coach Frank Girardi are pictured under the billboard the bank sponsored (corner of West 4th and Market Streets, Williamsport) in tribute to the Warriors successful football season.

Aiken Breaks Two Lady Warrior Basketball Records

Senior Adrienne Aiken will leave the Lady Warrior basketball program holding the career scoring and rebounding records following her brilliant four year career.

Aiken, Hollidaysburg (PA), has scored 1,437 points and eclipsed the old record of 1,164 set by Diane (Arpert) Saalfrank from 1981 through 1985.

The 5-9 forward has grabbed 808 rebounds, erasing the 772 rebound record that was established by Amy Elder from 1979-83.

There was a time when it appeared that Aiken's career was over, due to a herniated disk in her back. Laser surgery was performed at the outset of her junior year and she was back playing ball by the Christmas holiday break.

Aiken, the lone senior on this year's Lady Warrior team, was honored in a special ceremony during her final home game (v. Misericordia, Tuesday, February 12, 1991).

Bill Byham is sports information director at Lycoming College.

In The News

C. Kenneth Allard, Ph.D., has recently completed a new book for Yale University Press entitled, Command, Control and the Common Defense. Allard, special assistant to the Chief of Staff, United States Army, has developed an analysis on "the tension between the joint teamwork demanded by modern combat and the traditions of service autonomy reinforced by competing ideas about land, sea, and air warfare."

A promotional flyer from the Yale University Press describes Lieutenant Colonel Allard's book as "a comprehensive history of the American military command structure." Colonel Allard, described as "soldier-scholar," suggests strongly that massive amounts of high technology and tax dollars will not overcome unresolved organizational differences which are inherent in the command and control systems within the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Lieutenant Colonel C. Kenneth Allard, holds advanced degrees from the University of Southern California, the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University, and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University.

Described as one of Lycoming's all-time outstanding professors, Robert H. Ewing died January 28, 1991 at the age of 83. He and his wife, the former HELEN JOHNSON '41, lived in Williamsport. He had been in failing health the past few years.

Professor Emeritus of History since his retirement in 1973, he had enjoyed 26 years of teaching at Lycoming. At his retirement, because of the great respect in which he was held by students and colleagues, he was awarded an Honorary Doctor of Humanities Degree. His former students and friends, through their generous gifts, also established the "Robert H. Ewing Lectures in the Humanities." This endowed lectureship has brought distinguished historians to the Lycoming campus.

Professor Ewing was a graduate of the College of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio and received a master's degree from the University of Michigan. He was an active churchman, a member and elder of Covenant Central Presbyterian Church, Williamsport. He was the son of the late Reverend Henry D. and Jane H. Ewing.

A memorial service was held at his church, officiated by his pastors and The Reverend Dr. John F. Piper, Jr., Professor of History at Lycoming and Chairman of the History Department. Burial was in Wildwood Cemetery.

Barbara A. Gillette died December 28, 1990 at the Southport Square Nursing Center, Port Charlotte, FL. Her husband, Associate Professor Emeritus of Spanish, Phil G. Gillette, died in 1982.
